The Heart of Community

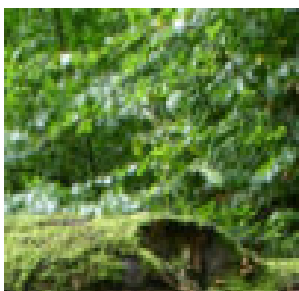

As Christians we are admonished to “forsake not the gathering of ourselves together.”

Today’s world is filled with ways to connect with others – electronically, by cell phones and computers, and other devices. Yet, virtual community leaves something to be desired. God gave us eyes and ears and hands and bodies, and they all can contribute to our experience of being together. Jesus talked and ate and walked and slumbered and taught and worked and served and died in real face-to-face community. He embraced and touched and healed in very visceral ways. His human body was given to his disciples in many forms – and ultimately given to us as the Bread of Life.

So what is the heart of Christian Community? It is Christ’s body and His love at work within and through us. It is closeness, connection, compassion and Christ-like caring.

Community is giving our hearts to Christ and then unselfishly to one another.
